My Service To God*

Preface

"I count everything as loss because of the surpassing worth of knowing Christ Jesus my Lord. For His sake I have suffered the loss of all things, and count them as refuse, in order that I may gain Christ and be found in him....."(Philippians 3:8)

These words beautifully express Paul's commitment to Christ. The expression, "commitment," is tossed around rather loosely today, but the concept was meaningful to Paul because he lived it. Many "Christians" are torn by tension between serving Christ and the world. When the Lord's work demands more time, more money, greater effort, and the sacrifice of more selfish interests, opposition is encountered. "We are being asked to give too much." "We just don't have time to do these things." "I know it is a good work, but...." Where there should be a thrilling response to opportunities, there are often feelings of resentment, stress, anxiety and guilt. The service of Christ, designed to produce peace, joy, and fulfillment results instead in conflict.

The answer to this problem is simple to state but less simple to apply. Where there is real commitment to Christ, there is no longer a reason for the tension between the fleshly life and the spiritual life. It is invariably true that those who have attained a high level of peace and joy in the Christian life are those whose level of commitment to Christ and the spiritual life is very great. We no longer battle against spiritual urgings when we have truly become spiritual. The mental and spiritual turmoil of trying to serve two masters disappears when we get rid of the earthly master. The concept of commitment will become meaningful to us when we can say with Paul, "I count everything as refuse in order that I may gain Christ and be found in him...."
